

Facts About Proposition 20 Hold Politicians Accountable

Voting Yes on Proposition 20 expands the work of the voter-approved independent Citizens Redistricting Commission so that the Commission, rather than politicians, draws election districts for members of Congress. It ensures voters can hold politicians accountable through fair and competitive elections. And if the politicians don't do their jobs, Prop. 20 makes it easier to vote them out of office!

Yes on Prop. 20 Creates Fair Elections, Puts Voters in Charge

- In 2008, California voters approved Proposition 11 and took the power to draw state legislative and Board of Equalization districts out of the hands of politicians and gave it to an independent Citizens Redistricting Commission. However, the politicians still draw congressional districts so that their friends in Congress are virtually guaranteed reelection.
- Proposition 20 extends what voters already approved under Prop. 20, the independent Citizens Redistricting Commission, not legislators, will draw both legislative and congressional districts.
- Proposition 20 will finally put an end to legislators drawing districts that virtually guarantee Members of Congress get reelected, even when they don't listen to voters.

Yes on Prop. 20 Lets Voters Hold Politicians Accountable

- When congressional representatives are guaranteed reelection, they have little incentive to work together to solve the serious problems we all face.
- Proposition 20 will let the Citizens Redistricting Commission create fair congressional districts so politicians will actually have to work for our votes and respond to voter needs.
- With Proposition 20, voters will have a real voice in elections and it will be easier to vote politicians out of office when they don't do their jobs.

Paid for by Yes on 20, No on 27 – Hold Politicians Accountable, with major funding by Charles T. Munger, Jr.